

FAST TRAINS IN A CRASH ON CENTRAL ROAD

Montreal Express and Second
Section of Atlantic Express in Collision at Highlands.

A steamy fog that hung over the Hudson River valley early to-day caused a collision between two through passenger trains on the main line of the New York Central road at Highlands, six miles north of Peekskill. Fortunately, the accident was not attended with fatalities, because one of the trains was standing and the other was moving slowly. It served to illustrate that even the most perfect block signal system may go wrong under certain weather conditions.

Train No. 2, the Montreal express, due at the Grand Central Station at 11:15 o'clock A. M., standing on the main track, almost in front of the signal tower at Highlands, was run into by the engine of the second section of train No. 36, the Atlantic Express. Two baggage cars of No. 2 were overturned, and a baggage man was slightly shaken up.

All Through Trains Delayed.
All the fast trains due at the Grand Central Station in the early morning from the north and west were delayed from one to three hours. Among them, besides the two trains in collision, were the Buffalo Special, the Cleveland and New York Special, the Southwestern Special, the Wolverine, the Cleveland, Chicago and New York Special and the Twentieth Century Limited.

The New York Central schedule sends No. 32 and No. 36 down the valley of the Hudson pretty close together. They leave Albany only a few minutes apart. Because of the fog both trains were behind time.

No. 36 was the first to reach Highlands, which is a little station just below Garrison's, where a whole passenger train jumped into the Hudson a few years ago. There is a siding at Highlands to the west of the main tracks and this point is often utilized for the passing of trains bound in the same direction.

As No. 36 reached Highlands it was run on the siding and stopped. It was the design of the train dispatcher to run No. 32, which was right behind, into the Grand Central Station ahead of No. 36. The plan was changed. Towerman Miller set a red light against Engineer Glenn, of No. 32, which approached the station on the main track. At the same time he gave a clear signal to Engineer Busch, of No. 36.

As No. 36 reached Highlands it was run on the siding and stopped. It was the design of the train dispatcher to run No. 32, which was right behind, into the Grand Central Station ahead of No. 36. The plan was changed. Towerman Miller set a red light against Engineer Glenn, of No. 32, which approached the station on the main track. At the same time he gave a clear signal to Engineer Busch, of No. 36.

As soon as Engineer Glenn saw the white signal displayed he started his train, not knowing that the train on the next track had overrun the siding length. Engineer Busch had just reversed his engine to back up when the engine of No. 36, moving at about five miles an hour, smashed into the platform of the two forward baggage cars of the train on the main line.

The force of the collision threw the baggage cars across the northbound main track and brought No. 36 to a stop with a jerk that jarred every passenger. It was just 10 o'clock. The passengers on both trains piled out of their berths and grouped around the wreckage which looked huge and menacing in the dim light.

Delays Suburban Traffic.
A wrecking train reached the scene at 7 o'clock. The first work was to clear the northbound main track to allow the trains blocked up behind to pass through. When this work was accomplished a long line of Pullman trains began to sift down toward the Hudson River, blocking the line and interfering seriously with the New York bound suburban traffic. The road was not fully cleared until noon.
